A Map of Every Building in America, published by The New York Times on October 12th, 2018

“Most of the time, The New York Times asks you to read something. Today we are inviting you, simply, to look. On this page you will find maps showing almost every building in the United States.

Why did we make such a thing? We did it as an opportunity for you to connect with the country’s cities and explore them in detail. To find the familiar, and to discover the unfamiliar.

So ... look. Every black speck on the map below is a building, reflecting the built legacy of the United States.”

Places for the People, published by BBC on October 15th, 2018 [Audio Article]

We usually think of infrastructure as things like roads and storm drainage. This program discusses the importance of what they call “social infrastructure” such as libraries and parks, as well as how we design public spaces. The discussion includes data on social infrastructure and how it can contribute to civic life within a community. The program includes examples from both the US and the UK.
