- This class is designed to introduce high school students to commercial and industrial construction.
- Using the core construction curriculum, which is nationally recognized and accredited, students will be introduced to hand and power tools, blueprint drawings, rigging and construction materials.
- Students are required to perform many math calculations such as converting fractions, adding, subtracting and dividing decimals and recognizing and using metric units. Most of this is hands-on learning, so the students get to visualize using skills in real life.
- The class includes communication and teambuilding tasks and employability skills with mock job interviews. Students also get to interact with construction industry professionals during presentations periodically throughout the term.
- Benefits for students include a smoother transition from high school to employment into the construction field. Essentially, students gain a running start into becoming a craft professional.
