Red Flag laws are a recent arrival on the national scene. The intent of these laws is to provide a mechanism to remove firearms from the possession of individuals whose speech and behavior indicates that there is a danger that they will harm themselves or others. Considerable controversy attends the introduction and enactment of these laws. Eighteen states have such laws, but their provisions and the procedures vary greatly from one state to another. New Mexico's law was recently passed by the legislature and signed by the governor. In NM, the removal of weapons will be temporary. The NM statute requires that a law enforcement agency request the action and a court must endorse it. Gun owners have 72 hours to comply with the request. Many questions remain open concerning all aspects of this act.

7:30 Additional questions and comments from CPC attendees.
