Residents in the area complained of transients creating a camp in the vacant lot on the north end. There were several couches, chairs, beds, shopping carts, and fire pits in the lot. The camp generated an increase in panhandling at nearby intersections, auto and residential burglaries. Bike officers swept the area for transients and criminals on April 10. They utilized chainsaws, shears, and saws to cut down overgrown vegetation that Solid Waste Department was not authorized to cut. Bike officer George Wood organized a clean up tactical plan utilizing the Solid Waste Department and persons assigned to community service from Metro Court. Yoli, as she was known by her family and friends, was a beautiful, educated young woman who was married to an addicted, controlling abusive husband who was the father of her three young boys. For the love of her three boys she stayed in the relationship for almost 10 years before filing for divorce. Just days before the divorce was final, her soon to be ex-husband brutally murdered her in front of her three terrified children, the youngest who was only two years old. The last paragraph of the dedication plaque reads: "It is our hope that the Albuquerque Family Advocacy Center will provide the strength, hope, courage and resources to others who find themselves in the same situation as Yoli, so that they may forever free themselves from the bonds of an abusive relationship and see the world is a much brighter place without the dark clouds of anger and control." Yolanda Santoyo, February 14, 1966 – April 7, 1997
